

Inside Out

Published January 07, 2008 : Page 29

INSIDE OUT
JOHN GENZALE

When Cammi Granato began skating in Downers Grove, Ill., her parents bought her figure skates “with pompoms.” But she wanted to play hockey with boys, and didn’t mind that there was no equipment for girls. “I was a tomboy and wanted to fit in with the boys.” Now, the most famous female hockey player said it’s time for girls to have their own line of hockey gear. She skates the wing for founders Justine Carlisle and Anna Cloutier, whose 6-year-old daughter Bela’s desire to play hockey inspired BelaHockey, a new line of gear for girls. Granato is working on an instructional DVD while living in Vancouver with husband Ray Ferraro, who played 18 years in the NHL, and their son, Riley. She hasn’t played since she got pregnant in 2006, and isn’t sure whether she’ll play again, but said, “There’s a place in hockey for girls.” ... Ray provided the introduction and Cammi joined CEO Marc Ruskin’s FASTHockey, a Web-based hockey recruiting site that involves hockey execs Brian Burke and Lyman Bullard and former players Ferraro, Scott Young, Marty McInnis, Scott LaChance, Ted Crowley, David Jensen and now Pat LaFontaine.